RESEARCH*Overview Description

My research has been primarily concerned with the critical examination of diversity, inclusion, equity, and justice (DIEJ) matters within and through the contexts of sport organizations and the academy/higher education. This work has sought to better understand how various forms of marginalization and oppression have impacted access, opportunities, experiences, and outcomes of certain groups and individuals in these contexts. The overarching goal of my work is to help change the conditions (i.e., systems, policies, practices) that allow marginalization and oppression to persist. It has focused particularly on race and racism at the intersections of sport, education, and society. I am a critical-interpretivist scholar who has primarily utilized qualitative research approaches to center the voices, perspectives, and narratives of the participants in my interdisciplinary research. My major research thrusts and contributions have been in three interrelated areas:

1. Black males as primary stakeholders of/in the U.S. athletics industrial complex
2. Systemic racism in sport and academia/higher education
3. Diversity leadership in sport and education contexts
